Making Sense Out of Sensory

Friday, April 17
8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Wes Watkins Center
Hall of Fame & Washington
Stillwater, Oklahoma

Speech–language pathologists commonly treat children exhibiting diverse and complex developmental issues, including those involving challenges with sensory processing or integration. Treatments designed to address these difficulties can take various forms. Most treatments are sensory-based and involve providing specialized sensory input to the child or adapting the environment to allow for regulation which allow the child to benefit from treatment approaches.

This course is offered for 0.6 ASHA CEUs
(Introductory level, Professional area). Financial: Speaker is receiving an honorarium from the CCCD Conference, OSU, for this talk. Speaker has financial relationship with Fiddle Focus. Nonfinancial: Speaker is a parent of a child who is living with ADHD/Sensory Processing/Tourette’s.

Kari Rains
M.S., C.C.P.S.

Kari Rains is a child and parenting specialist and child development specialist. Kari strives to find practical solutions for families and early childhood teachers and directors who have few resources within the rural areas of Oklahoma.

Kari’s middle child, who is living with ADHD/Sensory Processing/Tourette’s, allows her to see first-hand the realities of being a parent whose child has difficulty with change. She is able to apply this experience in being an early childhood professional.

Kari has served as an adjunct instructor, published two books and numerous research articles in the field of child development.
